

Gujarati dictionary to go online

By OUR CORRESPONDENT

Mumbai, Jan. 6: For the first time ever, a Gujarati website gujaratilexicon.com containing a digital dictionary will be launched in India. This dictionary will provide the basic information that a dictionary on the Internet provides. This hi-tech digital dictionary has been designed by a UK-based industrialist Mr Ratilal Chandaria. The dictionary contains a comprehensive collection of more than two million words and will also run a Gujarati spell check. Mr Chandaria has spent two decades preparing this digital dictionary.

He said, "This Internet dictionary will meet the needs of the present and future generations. This is the only digital collection that derives its wide range of Gujarati words from various sources." Mr Chandaria also added, "Most institutions, schools, and universities that have been finding it difficult to get competent proof-readers, will heave a sigh of relief after the introduction of this digital dictionary."

Utkarsh, a part of Magnet group, and is leading software solution provider, will have a strategic tieup with Mr Chandaria's gujaratilexicon.com. Utkarsh will upgrade the website and will be responsible for gujaratilexicon.com's layout. It will also provide a keyboard with Gujarati letters.

Mr Ashok Karamia, CEO of Magnet said, "The alliance between gujaratilexicon.com and Utkarsh will help preserve Gujarati's heritage."
